City of Richland Hills, Texas

Memorandum

To: Honorable Mayor Edward Lopez and members of the Richland Hills City Council
From: Eric Strong, City Manager
Date: March 25, 2019
Subject: Hotel Occupancy Tax

---

City Council Action Requested:

Consider use of Hotel Occupancy Tax funds and related contracts and agreements.

Background Information:

When the two hotels in Richland Hills opened in 2009, they were provided with an incentive agreement that lasted 10 years. The purpose of the incentive agreement was to fund certain Hotel Transportation systems (shuttle) and Marketing efforts. The agreement had a tiered “rebate” structure in which the Hotel Operator received 50% of the HOT taxes for the first three years, and 40% of the HOT taxes for the last seven years. That currently amounts to approximately $85,000 per year. Over the course of the ten year agreement, we have rebated $929,906.01 to the Hotels from this agreement. The operator of the hotels would like for you to consider extending his agreement. In addition to that, there are other options for the funds as well, which we will discuss in more detail at the meeting.

The laws that govern the Hotel Occupancy Tax expenditures are fairly specific and detailed. I have attached a summary page of eligible expenses for the tax to this memo.

THE HOTEL TAX “TWO-STEP”

By Bill Longley, TML Legislative Counsel

In the grand scheme of things, city hotel occupancy taxes account for just a small amount of city revenue. Property taxes and sales taxes are far more important to most cities. Why does it seem, then, that hotel taxes generate so much confusion and controversy?

The answer is this: Hotel taxes, unlike most other taxes, are levied on a specific category of businesses—hotels. As a result, these businesses tend to pay close attention to how cities expend these funds. Spend city sales taxes in a controversial way, and no particular category of business feels singled out enough to raise a fuss. Perceived misuses of hotel taxes, on the other hand, are a different story.

Fortunately, it's very easy for a city official to remember how to legally spend hotel taxes. A city simply needs to remind itself to always follow the "two-part test." The key element of a two-part test is – surprise – that it has two parts! Cities frequently remember to meet one element of the test, but then entirely forget the other part. This article will succinctly describe the two-part test, and then describe some common situations to which we can apply the test.

Part 1: Heads in Beds

The first element of the two-part test is this: Every expenditure of hotel taxes must put "heads in beds." What this means is that every funded project must attract overnight tourists to the city's hotels and motels, thus promoting the city's hotel industry.

For example, how about a weekend-long arts and crafts show? There's a very good chance that out-of-town guests might come to visit such an event, so expenditure of hotel tax money on that event would likely qualify.

On the other hand, how about a quilting bee at a local nursing home? While a worthy cause, the quilting bee is unlikely to attract overnight tourists and, therefore, probably wouldn't qualify to receive hotel tax funds.

Part 2: The Nine Categories

Once a project has cleared the first part of the test, it's time for – you guessed it – the second part of the test. Here it is: Every expenditure of hotel taxes must also fit into one of nine statutorily authorized categories. These are the nine categories: (1) convention and visitor centers; (2) convention registration; (3) advertising the city; (4) promotion of the arts; (5) historical restoration and preservation; (6) sporting events in a county under one million in population; (7) enhancing or upgrading existing sports facilities or sports fields (only in certain cities); (8) tourist transportation systems; and (9) signage directing the public to sights and attractions that are visited frequently by hotel guests in the city.

Thus, even if an event puts heads in beds, it cannot receive hotel tax money unless it also fits into one of the nine categories. For instance, what about a livestock auction that will attract attendees from surrounding counties? While that event is likely to attract overnight tourists, it doesn't fit neatly into one of the nine categories. Therefore, it's likely not a valid recipient of hotel tax money.

It's not enough to meet one of the two prongs of the two-part test. A city must meet both! The following are some real-life examples that have been the focus of inquiries received by the Texas Municipal League (TML) Legal Department.

Fireworks, Anyone?

The prototype hotel tax controversy is an event like a fireworks show or a parade. Cities frequently ask if they can fund a fireworks show with hotel tax money.

Let's subject a fireworks show to the two-part test. Does a fireworks show put heads in beds? The answer is "probably not," unless it is a truly spectacular event. But let's give it the benefit of the doubt. Suppose the Town of Pyrotechnic, Texas, truly does put on a fireworks extravaganza that attracts tourists from around the state. So far, so good.

But what about the second part of the test – the nine categories? Do fireworks shows fit neatly into any of the nine? Not really. Some may argue that such shows "advertise" the city, but this is likely not what that category means. Advertising the city literally means some sort of print or other media that explicitly promote the city. Otherwise, a city could simply say that any popular event "advertises" the city that holds it. Direct funding of fireworks displays and the like are, usually, not a very good fit.

Signs of the Times?

Another frequent question concerns highway signs promoting the city. May a city fund a billboard touting the city's attractions, restaurants, and hotels? Let's put it to the two-part test. Heads in beds? Well, why not? If a billboard encourages motorists to stop in town, those motorists might stay the night, whereas without the sign they would have driven on to the next city. This is exactly what the statute intends. The nine categories? How about advertising? Prior to 2009, a convincing argument could be made that because a billboard literally advertises the city it refers to, that it would fit within the advertising category. All doubt was erased in 2009, when the Texas Legislature added the ninth category – signage directing the public to sights and attractions. Travel signs are a perfect fit for hotel occupancy tax expenditures.

Chambers of Commerce?

Cities frequently wonder if they can fund the local chamber of commerce using hotel tax money. Do chambers put heads in beds? Maybe, maybe not. Chambers of commerce are typically charged with promoting economic development, not tourism. Even assuming a chamber does promote tourism though, how about the nine categories? Funding a chamber doesn't, in itself, fall into any of the nine categories.

Fortunately, there is an easy solution. The laws governing hotel tax expenditures permit the city to delegate expenditure of hotel tax money to another entity, typically a chamber or convention and visitor bureau. As long as the chamber spends the money on projects that otherwise meet the two-part test mentioned above, it's fine to delegate some funds to them. There must be a written contract laying out the duties of the chamber, though. Also, the chamber must keep the hotel funds in an account separate from its general operating fund.

Arts Organizations

City arts organizations are a common trouble area. It seems that every arts council in the state knows that promotion of the arts is one of the nine categories on which city hotel taxes may be expended. Cities know this because these arts groups frequently come asking for the money.

The thing to remember about arts groups is this: Direct funding of the organization's operations does nothing in and of itself to put "heads in beds." Put another way, funding the operating budget of an arts council meets the second part of the test (promotion of the arts) but not necessarily the first.

The solution? The city should encourage the group to seek funding only for its festivals and shows that do, in fact, attract tourists to the city. By limiting the expenditure to such events, the city meets both parts of the test.

Don't Forget to Report

Legislation passed in 2017 that requires cities to annually report hotel occupancy tax information to the comptroller, including information on how the funds are spent. Not later than February 20 of each year, a city that imposes a hotel occupancy tax must submit to the comptroller information that includes the city's hotel occupancy tax rate, the amount of revenue generated by the tax, and the amount and percentage of the revenue spent for each of the following purposes:

- Convention or information centers
- Convention delegates registration
- Advertising to attract tourists
- Arts promotion and improvement
- Historical restoration and preservation projects
- Signage directing the public to sights and attractions

Cities must comply with the annual reporting requirements by either submitting the report to the comptroller on a form prescribed by the comptroller, or alternatively providing the comptroller a direct link to, or a clear statement describing the location of, the information required to be reported that is posted on the city's website.

What Else?

There are numerous other technical details about how to legally expend hotel tax funds. In truth, by simply learning and remembering the two-part test, city officials are 99 percent of the way toward full compliance with hotel tax laws. City officials with questions about the hotel occupancy tax should call the TML Legal Department at 512-231-7400. ★
